when you're separating and need family dispute resolution

a Centrecare service for families experiencing separation and divorce

Separation can be a difficult time for families, particularly for children who are often confused about changes in their lives. Centrecare Family Dispute Resolution focuses on children. They also assist couples and families communicate effectively and reach agreements in relation to the needs of children and/or resolve property matters.

Where appropriate, children are invited to meet with Centrecare's Child Consultant who will listen to the children's feelings and views.

The Child Consultant will provide feedback to parents on a separate occasion with the assistance of a Family Dispute Resolution Practitioner. Children's feedback helps parents and carers to develop parenting plans that are in their child's best interests. Extended family members, including step parents and grandparents, may also access Family Dispute Resolution.

Benefits of Family Dispute Resolution:

- children are the primary focus;
- less costly and stressful than going to court;
- having control over decisions affecting you and your family;
- resolving differences so you can get on with your life;
- finding solutions you can live with;
- having your point of view heard;
- being in a confidential, safe and neutral place in which to discuss parenting and financial issues; and
- reaching agreements respectfully.

when...

...solutions can be found through family dispute resolution

Family Law changes

Family Law has changed. The Family Law requires parents to attempt to resolve issues related to their children through Family Dispute Resolution (or a similar service) before being able to initiate proceedings in the Family Court. Exceptions could apply to this rule such as family violence or urgent matters.

How many sessions will I need?

Each person will attend a minimum of one individual session and according to your needs a joint session may be offered. Further sessions will be negotiated as you go along. Where children are involved, a "Child In Focus" seminar is offered and most parents find this very helpful in supporting their children to manage the separation process.

Are agreements legally binding?

Any agreements made during the Family Dispute Resolution process are not legally binding. Agreements in relation to property and/or parenting plans can however be registered in the Family Court. We recommend that you talk to a legal practitioner during the process of Family Dispute Resolution.
