

Ten Top Tips

When people in relationships want to communicate more effectively

1. You cannot control your partner's behaviour, but you can control how you relate to him or her. For example, you can control how you say things, your tone of voice and your choice of words.
2. When you see something you appreciate in your partner, let him or her know with words or a gesture. Show your appreciation by expressing your feelings. For example: "I enjoyed our meal tonight" or give your partner a hug.
3. When you have a disagreement, try to argue constructively without criticising, judging or dumping on your partner. For example, avoid using words such as 'always', 'never' or 'should', such as: "You never help me with anything."
4. When you are discussing something important, try to become aware of your feelings and those of your partner. Practice asking yourself: "How and what am I feeling about this situation right now?" Then try to share these feelings with your partner, even if they are negative.
5. When arguing, be clear and specific over what you are in disagreement about. Use an "I" statement to express how you feel and how you would like things to be different. For example: "I felt hurt when you spent our grocery money on new clothes. I would have preferred that you had talked with me first."
6. Try not to take your partner for granted. Spend quality time with each other on a regular basis. Relationships need nourishing.
7. In real love you want what is good for the other person. In love, which is only romantic, you want the other person.
8. Don't be afraid to admit to your mistakes and shortcomings. No one is perfect.
9. Love yourself and make your needs known to each other.
10. Never be afraid to seek outside help and better earlier than later. Seeking help is a sign of strength, not a weakness.
